BIG DIRIGIBLE FIGHTS BLINDING SNOWSTORM

UNABLE TO LAND AT LAKEHURST DURING NIGHT

SHARP CROSS WIND BREAKS LANDING CABLE AT FIRST ATTEMPT

COMMANDER ORDERS SHIP ALOFT WHEN STORM BREAKS

Lakehurst, N. J., March 3.—(UP)—The dirigible Los Angeles was "walked" into her hangar here at 7:05 A. M. today after the crew had fought virtually all night to bring her to a landing in a blinding snowstorm.

The big dirigible first appeared over the field at 11 P. M. Friday and since that time efforts were made to bring it either to the mooring mast or to a ground landing.

Once it was brought to a ground landing, but a blinding snow storm and sharp winds prevented its removal to a hangar, and the craft again took the air.

Original plans were for the craft to moor to the mast. A ground crew was ready to help in lashing the Los Angeles to the mast when the dirigible appeared.

For almost three hours the ground crew attempted to fasten cables to the Los Angeles but a sharp cross wind—running about 25 to 35 miles an hour—prevented. One cable was attached but was snapped.

Then it was decided to attempt a ground landing and walk the plane into the hangar.

The first attempt resulted in the Los Angeles settling easily down to earth at 3:56 A. M. A ground crew of 150 men was manning the ropes.

Just at that time a heavy snow storm started and Commander Chas. E. Rosendahl ordered that the ship again take to the air. A fresh supply of gasoline was taken aboard and the dirigible went aloft at 4:13.

As the Los Angeles rose into the air she had carried four members of the ground crew with her. The men were clinging perilously to handrails of the cabin, exposed to the biting gale. A fifth man released his hold before the ship had risen 20 feet and was injured in the fall.

The four men who were clinging to the hand rail were saved when members of the crew pulled them inside the cabin.

The dirigible cruised in the immediate radius of Lakehurst until shortly before 7 A. M. when the successful landing was made.

The Cuban cruise embraced 4,320 miles and carried the air giant to two countries with but two stops, one at Panama and the other at Cuba. The average speed was 42½ miles an hour.

This feat was regarded by naval officials as epoch making and they say demonstrated the feasibility of such craft for commercial and defense purposes.

The dirigible's 39-hour flight to France Field, Panama Canal Zone, a distance of 2,250 miles from Lakehurst, without stop, will go down in naval records as one of the greatest achievements by an airship. This achievement was almost equalled by the Los Angeles' one-stop return flight to the hangar from the Canal Zone, 771 miles from France field to the tender Patoka at Guanacayabo Bay, Cuba, and 1,300 miles from the Patoka to Lakehurst.

The Los Angeles has spent a total of approximately 102 hours in the air since Sunday when it took off from here at 6:55 A. M.

Throughout the long non-stop flight down the Atlantic coast, across part of the Gulf of Mexico and over the Caribbean sea, the Los Angeles encountered unusually favorable weather, except for a storm and severe winds when nearing Panama.

Commander Rosendahl said after the ship was safely berthed that the Los Angeles had behaved splendidly during the entire trip. She holds the record of being the only craft of any kind that ever sailed from New York to the Canal Zone in two days.

"The purpose of the flight," said the commander, "was merely to train the crew and for experiment. It was a success in every way. The five motors never missed a beat and the water recovery system functioned perfectly in all kinds of weather. We left New York when it was 6 degrees above zero in the air and when we got out over the Bahamas it was 86. The change in temperature made no difference to the Los Angeles. She continued on her way unhampered."

The commander pointed out that it was a singular fact that the only trouble encountered during the entire trip—approximately 5,000 miles —was at the take-off and at the landing.

Cross hangar winds gave the crew a few busy moments when the Los Angeles went out of its hangar on the start of the flight to the Canal Zone and interfered with her landing on her return.

Commander Rosendahl was asked if he and his men had any moments of anxiety when the dirigible was torn from the cable and from the hands of the ground crew this morning.

"Never, for one minute," he said. "We knew she was light and would lift easily. We knew her motors were right and there was nothing to cause any anxiety. We knew she would submit to the proper handling."

BEAT HIS WIFE WITH HAMMER, 'SHE NAGGED ME'

Bradford, Pa., March 3.—(U.P.)—W. J. Burnett admitted today he had killed his wife by beating her over the head with a hammer, because "she nagged me."

Mrs. Burnett died shortly after midnight, never regaining consciousness after the attack.

Burnett surrendered to county police who announced he had made a complete confession. He is 53 years old and his wife was 46.

"I'm sorry I'm in trouble again but I am not sorry I hit her. She nagged me into it."

MOTOR TRUCK FREIGHT WAR BREAKS OUT

ST. CLOUD OPERATORS APPEAL TO RAILROAD AND WAREHOUSE COMMISSION

SERVED NOTICE THEY WOULD APPEAL FROM GRANTING PERMIT TO RIVAL COMPANY

St. Paul, Minn., March 3. — A motor truck freight rate war broke out in transportation circles today when Raymond Bros., St. Cloud, operators of truck service between the Twin Cities and Sauk Center served notice that they would appeal from the order of the state railroad and warehouse commission which granted a permit to the Minnesota Motor Express Co., to operate simflar service between the Twin Cities and Moorhead.

The question of rate regulation is behind the appeal, it was indicated in the notice filed today.

The Minnesota Motor Express Co., it was declared, base their rates on those of the American Railway Express Co., with from 20 to 25 per cent reduction while the Raymond Bros. have arranged their tariffs on the railroad schedule of less than carload lots with a reduction.

It is believed that the appeal has been made in an attempt to provide a regulatory system for establishing motor truck freight rates.

RUDDER AND STABILIZER ARE IDENTIFIED

PLANE CRASHED ON FLIGHT BETWEEN HAMPTON ROADS AND ANNAPOLIS

SEARCH NOW CONCENTRATED IN AREA TO FIND REST OF PLANE AND 3 BODIES

Washington, March 3.—(UP)—Parts of the amphibian plane in which three naval airmen disappeared last Monday were found today by the navy department four miles south of Cape Charles City, Va., on the eastern shore of Chesapeake Bay.

The rudder and the starboard horizontal stabilizer were the two parts identified as belonging to the plane. Finding of the pieces indicated, the navy believed, that the airmen met their death when the plane crashed on the flight between Hampton Roads, Va., and Annapolis, Md.

The point at which the plane parts were found is about twenty miles from Hampton Roads, where the airmen took off at 2 A. M. Monday to fly to the bedside of Commander Ellyson's 12-year-old daughter, ill at Annapolis.

Discovery of the pieces was the first definite clue the navy had received since the men were lost. The parts were found just off the beach in the water.

Search will be concentrated in the area about Cape Charles City in an effort to find the rest of the plane and the bodies of the men.

Lost with Ellyson were Lieut. Commander Hugo Schmidt and Lieut. Roger Ransehousen, all from the aircraft carrier Lexington.

The navy on identifying the wreckage immediately gave the fliers up for dead and organized a fleet of boats at the Norfolk navy yard and Hampton Roads, to proceed 20 miles north to Cape Charles City and drag the bay for the bodies.

ARREST SOON IN 'NIGHTGOWN MURDER'

Livingston, Ala., March 3.—(U.P.)—An arrest before night in the "nightgown murder" of Mrs. D. A. McDonald, prominent resident of York, was predicted today by the state law enforcement officers investigating the case.

Clad only in her night gown and with a bundle of clothing for her small son clasped in her arms, Mrs. McDonald's body was found 300 yards from her home early Thursday where she had been shot to death.

Investigators working under Walter K. McAdory, chief of the state law enforcement division refused to divulge the names of persons under surveillance, but indicated they were nearing a solution.

Mrs. McDonald disappeared from her home at 2:30 A. M., according to her invalid husband, who told authorities he had locked the doors to prevent her from walking in her sleep—a frequent custom.

Examination of the home indicated Mrs. McDonald left by means of a screened window which had been forced out from the inside. Late last year, it was learned McDonald and his wife took out a mutual insurance policy of $5,000, the survivor of the two to be the beneficiary. He denied all knowledge of his wife's slayer.

AGED WOMAN TESTIFIES IN COURT

St. Paul, March 3.—(U.P.)—Legal battles in court—after almost 103 years battling with life—were child's play, avered Mrs. Marie Rossi Earberl as she testified in her suit to recover $30 due her she said, for rent on a home she owns.

Supported by her only son, Louis Capucci, 60, the aged woman advanced from her seat to the witness stand with a firm step.

After giving the necessary data she declared legal battles were nothing compared with life's battles, particularly after being married three times and outliving all husbands but one and but one of her six children.

The woman's outlook on life took longer to tell than it did for her to testify. The case will be decided next week.

2 SLAVIC PENNIES AS THE ONLY CLEW TO KILLERS OF BOYS

SEEK TO TRACE IDENTITY OF 2 BODIES FOUND IN INDIANA HARBOR CANAL

BOTH BODIES BADLY DECOMPOSED, BELIEVED 3 WEEKS DEAD WHEN FOUND

Indiana Harbor, Ind., March 3.—(UP)—With two Slavic pennies as their only clue police of four cities searched the foreign sections of the Calumet steel mill district today the slayer of two small boys whose bodies were found in a ship canal here.

Bodies of the two youths, about 8 or 9 years old, were unidentified but police were convinced by the similarity of features that they were brothers.

The first body was recovered Feb. 22 in the Lake Michigan-Calumet river ship canal. Eight days later the body of the second youth was found about a half-mile distant. Both bodies were bound with wire, which police believed was obtained in the yards of the Great Lakes Dredge and Dock Company, nearby.

In a shoe on each body police found a Slavic one-cent piece. This fact, together with the similarity of dress, led police to believe the two boys might have been slain by a relative and buried in keeping with the ancient Slavic custom of burying money with their dead.

This theory was strengthened by the fact that both boys were dressed in practically new clothes, which also corresponded to the Slavic burial custom.

Whiting, Indiana Harbor, East Chicago and Gary all contain a large foreign population, the Slavs being more concentrated in Gary.

Both bodies were badly decomposed and a coroner's report said both youths probably had been dead for at least three weeks. No water was found in the lungs of either body, eliminating the possibility that the boys accidentally drowned.

East Chicago, Ind., March 3. — George Smith, Canadian, confessed to police here today that he had caused the drowning of two children, George Jr., 9, and John 7, whose bodies were found in the Indiana ship canal near here.

He tricked the children into walknig out on a plank over the canal after he had fastened them together with wire, he said. Then one fell in and dragged the other after him.

"I intended to kill myself, but didn't have the nerve," Chief of Police James W. Regan quoted Smith as saying.

Smith, whose wife lives in England since they were separated some time ago, became discouraged over the future of his sons without their mother. He decided to kill them, he said.

About 10 o'clock he took them to the canal and bound them together with a wire. The boys had asked to see their grandmother, who had died, but o fwhich they were unaware. Smith told them to walk out on the plank and look into the water if they wanted to see their grandmother. The boys did as directed, the confession said. George lost his balance and fell in and John was dragged in with him.

REPRESENTATIVES OF TWO GOVERNMENTS HONOR BODY OF MRS. LILY BUSCH

St. Louis, Mo., March 3.—(UP)—Honored by representatives of two governments, the body of Mrs. Lily Busch, late widow of Adolphus A. Busch, wealthy St. Louis brewer, reposed today in the massive $250,000 family mausoleum here.

Following impressive funeral services at the family home, No. 1 Busch Place, the body was borne to Bellefontaine cemtery, where American Legionnaires whom Mrs. Busch had befriended sounded taps, answered by a soldier from Jefferson Barracks.

The funeral eulogy referred to Mrs. Busch's war-time benefactions in behalf of both German and American soldiers, and to her post-war contributions to the American Legion. When the war broke out, Mrs. Busch, then in Germany, converted her home into a hospital.

HIS ATTORNEYS ARGUE TO HAVE CASE DISMISSED

MISSING WITNESS IS STILL IN PARIS, CLAIMS FRENCH RESIDENCE

HIS DEPOSIT OF $100,000 BONDS IN DANGER OF FORFEITURE

Washington, March 3.—(UP) — Trial of H. M. Blackmer, missing Teapot Dome witness, began here today with the oil man's attorneys arguing in behalf of their motion to dismiss contempt proceedings against him.

Nathan R. Miller, former governor of New York, told Justice F. L. Siddons in District of Columbia supreme court that the Walsh act, under which Blackmer was subpoenaed in Paris as a Fall-Sinclair oil trial witness, was unconstitutional.

Blackmer is still in Paris. If he loses the present case he likewise loses his $100,000 in liberty bonds which the government seized under the Walsh act following his refusal to return and testify.

Miller argued that Blackmer is a resident of France and not of the United States and therefore is outside the court's jurisdiction.

Atlee Pomerene, special government oil counsel, interposed that Blackmer had made affidavit that he is an American citizen. Miller replied that Blackmer retired from business in 1924 and left Denver for Paris. He added Blackmer had retained his American citizenship until 1926 and since then has been a "permanent resident" of France.

Miller said, however, that regardless of the citizenship question the court has no jurisdiction over the defendant.

He contended also that seizure of $100,000 of Blackmer's bonds, authorized under the Walsh act, was also unconstitutional.

After both sides completed arguments Justice Siddons recessed the case until Monday, March 12, to allow time to file rebuttal briefs.

NELSON WITNESS IN OWN DEFENSE

Cochran, former German language newspaper publisher and promoter will be the last witness for the defense.

The trial today brought to a close the sixth consecutive week of bitter controversy.

It is expected that Cochran, who formerly declared he would not testify, will go to the witness stand either late today or Monday. At least four days more will be needed to complete the case before the jury begins deliberations, court attaches indicated today.

Besides Nelson and Cochran, 16 aides of the latter are on trial.

The government charged that through promotional schemes, Cochran swindled northwest investors out of nearly $2,000,000.

STARTLING CHARGES MADE OF 'PROTECTED' RUM RUNNING

Washington, March 3. — (U.P.)—Members of the United States district attorney's office were called for questioning today by a house subcommittee investigating startling charges of "protected" rum running into the nation's capital. They were to be asked whether they promised immunity to bootleggers who would testify against a policeman accused of holding up a liquor truck recently.

Rep. Blanton, (Dem., Texas), told of the alleged immunity promise yesterday during a series of dramatic prohibition incidents in the house.

Blanton parked the seized truck near the capitol, had the District of Columbia commissioners inspect a sealed compartment in it capable of holding 600 gallons of liquor and then demanded removal of a high police official, who he said, permitted the rum running.

ARREST SOON IN 'NIGHTGOWN MURDER'

Livingston, Ala., March 3.—(U.P.)—An arrest before night in the "nightgown murder" of Mrs. D. A. McDonald, prominent resident of York, was predicted today by the state law enforcement officers investigating the case.

Clad only in her night gown and with a bundle of clothing for her small son clasped in her arms, Mrs. McDonald's body was found 300 yards from her home early Thursday where she had been shot to death.

Investigators working under Walter K. McAdory, chief of the state law enforcement division refused to divulge the names of persons under surveillance, but indicated they were nearing a solution.

Mrs. McDonald disappeared from her home at 2:30 A. M., according to her invalid husband, who told authorities he had locked the doors to prevent her from walking in her sleep—a frequent custom.

Examination of the home indicated Mrs. McDonald left by means of a screened window which had been forced out from the inside. Late last year, it was learned McDonald and his wife took out a mutual insurance policy of $5,000, the survivor of the two to be the beneficiary. He denied all knowledge of his wife's slayer.

AGED WOMAN TESTIFIES IN COURT

St. Paul, March 3.—(U.P.)—Legal battles in court—after almost 103 years battling with life—were child's play, avered Mrs. Marie Rossi Earberl as she testified in her suit to recover $30 due her she said, for rent on a home she owns.

Supported by her only son, Louis Capucci, 60, the aged woman advanced from her seat to the witness stand with a firm step.

After giving the necessary data she declared legal battles were nothing compared with life's battles, particularly after being married three times and outliving all husbands but one and but one of her six children.

The woman's outlook on life took longer to tell than it did for her to testify. The case will be decided next week.

2 SLAVIC PENNIES AS THE ONLY CLEW TO KILLERS OF BOYS

BOTH BODIES BADLY DECOMPOSED, BELIEVED 3 WEEKS DEAD WHEN FOUND

Indiana Harbor, Ind., March 3.—(U.P.)—With two Slavic pennies as their only clue police of four cities searched the foreign sections of the Calumet steel mill district today the slayer of two small boys whose bodies were found in a ship canal here.

Bodies of the two youths, about 8 or 9 years old, were unidentified but police were convinced by the similarity of features that they were brothers.

The first body was recovered Feb. 22 in the Lake Michigan-Calumet river ship canal. Eight days later the body of the second youth was found about a half-mile distant. Both bodies were bound with wire, which police believed was obtained in the yards of the Great Lakes Dredge and Dock Company, nearby.

In a shoe on each body police found a Slavic one-cent piece. This fact, together with the similarity of dress, led police to believe the two boys might have been slain by a relative and buried in keeping with the ancient Slavic custom of burying money with their dead.

This theory was strengthened by the fact that both boys were dressed in practically new clothes, which also corresponded to the Slavic burial custom.

Whiting, Indiana Harbor, East Chicago and Gary all contain a large foreign population, the Slavs being more concentrated in Gary.

Both bodies were badly decomposed and a coroner's report said both youths probably had been dead for at least three weeks. No water was found in the lungs of either body, eliminating the possibility that the boys accidentally drowned.

East Chicago, Ind., March 3. — George Smith, Canadian, confessed to police here today that he had caused the drowning of two children, George Jr., 9, and John 7, whose bodies were found in the Indiana ship canal near here.

He tricked the children into walknig out on a plank over the canal after he had fastened them together with wire, he said. Then one fell in and dragged the other after him.

"I intended to kill myself, but didn't have the nerve," Chief of Police James W. Regan quoted Smith as saying.

Smith, whose wife lives in England since they were separated some time ago, became discouraged over the future of his sons without their mother. He decided to kill them, he said.

About 10 o'clock he took them to the canal and bound them together with a wire. The boys had asked to see their grandmother, who had died, but o fwhich they were unaware. Smith told them to walk out on the plank and look into the water if they wanted to see their grandmother. The boys did as directed, the confession said. George lost his balance and fell in and John was dragged in with him.

TWO BOYS ENGAGE IN PLAYFUL DUEL, ONE IS KILLED

Pueblo, Colo., March 3.—(U.P.)—Ray Riley, 15, was shot and killed by Marshall Bowden, 14, when the two engaged in a playful duel here.

The Riley boy picked up a small rifle and pointed it at his chum. "Let's have a duel," he said.

"All right," Marshall replied grabbing a shotgun.

The shotgun accidentally exploded, the charge entering Riley's abdomen. He died 30 minutes later.

Marshall was questioned by police and released.

3,000 FLORAL TRIBUTES SENT

REPRESENTATIVES OF TWO GOVERNMENTS HONOR BODY OF MRS. LILY BUSCH

St. Louis, Mo., March 3.—(UP)—Honored by representatives of two governments, the body of Mrs. Lily Busch, late widow of Adolphus A. Busch, wealthy St. Louis brewer, reposed today in the massive $250,000 family mausoleum here.

Sixteen automobiles were required to transport 3,000 floral tributes sent by friends, by American Legion posts and by German admirers of the philanthropist, including Dr. George Ahrens, German consul, personally representing Count Von Prittwitz, his country's ambassador.

Following impressive funeral services at the family home, No. 1 Busch Place, the body was borne to Bellefontaine cemtery, where American Legionnaires whom Mrs. Busch had befriended sounded taps, answered by a soldier from Jefferson Barracks.

The funeral eulogy referred to Mrs. Busch's war-time benefactions in behalf of both German and American soldiers, and to her post-war contributions to the American Legion. When the war broke out, Mrs. Busch, then in Germany, converted her home into a hospital.

Mrs. Busch died last Saturday at Pasadena, Calif.

HIS ATTORNEYS ARGUE TO HAVE CASE DISMISSED

MISSING WITNESS IS STILL IN PARIS, CLAIMS FRENCH RESIDENCE

HIS DEPOSIT OF $100,000 BONDS IN DANGER OF FORFEITURE

Washington, March 3.—(UP) — Trial of H. M. Blackmer, missing Teapot Dome witness, began here today with the oil man's attorneys arguing in behalf of their motion to dismiss contempt proceedings against him.

Nathan R. Miller, former governor of New York, told Justice F. L. Siddons in District of Columbia supreme court that the Walsh act, under which Blackmer was subpoenaed in Paris as a Fall-Sinclair oil trial witness, was unconstitutional.

Blackmer is still in Paris. If he loses the present case he likewise loses his $100,000 in liberty bonds which the government seized under the Walsh act following his refusal to return and testify.

Miller argued that Blackmer is a resident of France and not of the United States and therefore is outside the court's jurisdiction.

Atlee Pomerene, special government oil counsel, interposed that Blackmer had made affidavit that he is an American citizen. Miller replied that Blackmer retired from business in 1924 and left Denver for Paris. He added Blackmer had retained his American citizenship until 1926 and since then has been a "permanent resident" of France.

Miller said, however, that regardless of the citizenship question the court has no jurisdiction over the defendant.

He contended also that seizure of $100,000 of Blackmer's bonds, authorized under the Walsh act, was also unconstitutional.

After both sides completed arguments Justice Siddons recessed the case until Monday, March 12, to allow time to file rebuttal briefs.

NELSON WITNESS IN OWN DEFENSE

St. Paul, Minn., March 3.—(U.P.)—Andrew E. Nelson, former state securities commissioner, charged with C. A. Cochran with using the mails to defraud will be a witness in his own defense in federal court here today. Cochran, former German language newspaper publisher and promoter will be the last witness for the defense.

The trial today brought to a close the sixth consecutive week of bitter controversy.

It is expected that Cochran, who formerly declared he would not testify, will go to the witness stand either late today or Monday. At least four days more will be needed to complete the case before the jury begins deliberations, court attaches indicated today.

Besides Nelson and Cochran, 16 aides of the latter are on trial.

The government charged that through promotional schemes, Cochran swindled northwest investors out of nearly $2,000,000.

STARTLING CHARGES MADE OF 'PROTECTED' RUM RUNNING

Washington, March 3. — (U.P.)—Members of the United States district attorney's office were called for questioning today by a house subcommittee investigating startling charges of "protected" rum running into the nation's capital. They were to be asked whether they promised immunity to bootleggers who would testify against a policeman accused of holding up a liquor truck recently.

Rep. Blanton, (Dem., Texas), told of the alleged immunity promise yesterday during a series of dramatic prohibition incidents in the house.

Blanton parked the seized truck near the capitol, had the District of Columbia commissioners inspect a sealed compartment in it capable of holding 600 gallons of liquor and then demanded removal of a high police official, who he said, permitted the rum running.

Old-Time Exhortation

A bidding prayer was a form of exhortation, always followed by the Lord's prayer, enjoined by the fifty-fifth canon of the Anglican church in 1603, to be used before all sermons and homilies. It was a prayer for the church, the sovereign, various classes of people, and a thanksgiving for the faithful departed. In changed forms, it still survives in modern church services.

PROGRESS OF THE BRAINERD BOYS' CONCERT BAND

By CARL ZAPFFE, JR.

The Brainerd Boys' Concert band is now nearly five years old. Yet, is finds itself to be in a position quite similar to that of two or three years ago when it was comprised of the younger boys entirely. By this I do not mean that the band is composed of raw material and is yet going through the first stages of development, for practically all the boys, though young, are accomplished players and the band has built for itself now a fine reputation as to its success and abilities of instrumentation.

But this last fall, a far greater number of boys than usual left the band, or wished to leave, on account of their going away to school or because of other undertakings requiring their time and effort; and, of course, these boys were the mainstays of the band. However, some of them stayed until after the concert and helped in that way, thus setting the younger boys upon the successful venture which they had themselves launched several years before. But now they have gone, the younger boys are striving with surprising ambition to refill the gaps left by the older ones; nevertheless, great as the task may seem, under the fine leadership of Mr. Becky, they have already proven themselves worthy successors, and are now playing rather difficult music.

However, this present advancement is only the first step in the realization of the band's ambition. It is now their fondest desire to increase the band to sixty members, nearly double what it is now; and as there are yet several months before the concert season begins, right now is the opportune time for a new member to join. If there is an instrument available, or if any boy is already fairly proficient on any band instrument, see Mr. Becky at the Y. M. C. A. the earliest Tuesday night possible from 7 o'clock to 9, or telephone 1124-M. The ability to play a musical instrument is bound to be beneficial to any boy both socially and financially as time goes on.

Do not be skeptical as to a boy's abilities, but let him try some instrument and prove his worth. Mr. Becky is able to secure instruments for boys on exceptionally reasonable payments.

LIVE STOCK

POISONOUS WEEDS WILL KILL SHEEP

The sudden death of one or more sheep in a flock is sometimes caused by their eating poisonous plants which may thrive, unnoticed, along grown-up fence rows, muddy or marshy places, or creek banks.

The more general symptoms of poisoning, according to D. S. Bell, in charge of sheep investigations at the Ohio agricultural experiment station, are frothing at the mouth, colicky spasms, loss of control of feet and legs, head drawn back, and intense agony of pain, indicated by a hard gritting or grinding of the teeth. Death usually occurs three to twenty-four hours after the first symptoms of illness appear.

Treatment in practically all cases of poisoning is useless. The destruction of all poisonous plants in the pasture is the only sure method of preventing loss.

Under certain conditions wild cherry and choke cherry are poisonous to sheep. White snakeroot is quite common in pastures in southeastern Ohio and is a "killer" if eaten in sufficient amount. This plant is a member of the same family as boneset, which it resembles. White hemlock is the most deadly of all, especially if the fleshy, tuberous root is eaten. It thrives only in marshy places and along creek banks. Its anchorage to the ground is so weak that it may be easily pulled out of the marshy soil and the root eaten.

In general sheep do not eat of these poisonous plants, as they are not very palatable. But in early spring when first turned on pasture and again in late summer when the grass becomes dry, sheep are reckless in their grazing and may eat of them. Often sheep just nip these plants, not taking a sufficient amount to cause death, and because of the quick action in these poisons the sickness caused usually goes unnoticed.

Dip Cattle in Autumn to Control Parasites

If your cattle become poor in flesh, lose the hair over the shoulders and neck, and spend considerable time in rubbing and scratching, they are probably infested with lice.

This is especially likely to occur and is usually more prevalent in the young animals. Not only are the animals constantly irritated and lose flesh, but their resistance to other diseases is lowered.

One method of controlling lice is to dip the cattle during the fall and spring. Dipping of cattle is not advisable, however, during the winter months on account of pneumonia. Hand treatment in many cases may relieve the animals until spring when they may be dipped. Three different treatments are commonly used. Equal parts of ground sabadilla seed and flowers of sulphur in the form of a dusting powder is a good treatment. One-half pint of kerosene to one pound of lard makes a good grease treatment. Any of the common coal-tar dips made up in a 3 per cent solution with warm water and then applied with a rag, brush, or spray pump will give some relief.

White ants of Indo-China have their own gardens, where they tend what might be called pumpkin patches. These insect gardeners raise microscopic pellets like pumpkins, made of a sort of fungus, somewhat similar to the mold on stale bread. A bed consisting of fragments of leaves and grass is prepared and weeded by the ants. These they chew into fine material into which they place the germs of fungus.

BRAINERD 25 YEARS AGO

From the Daily Dispatch

March 3, 1903

Last evening Miss Maud Cullen was tendered a birthday party at the home of her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Ed Cullen, in East Brainerd. About eighteen young people were present and a delightful time was had.

J. C. Congdon is around on crutches today. He swears that he does not know how it all happened, but some of his friends think they have a good joke on him.

Mrs. J. M. Schultz and daughter, Miss Emma, left this afternoon for Fargo where they will visit for a short time.

Mrs. O'Donnell arrived in the city this afternoon from Minneapolis for a visit with her daughters, Mrs. T. E. Canan and Miss O'Donnell.

A new wholesale fruit company has been organized in St. Paul which will be known as the Mulrooney, Ryan & Clark, and at least two of the gentlemen are very well known in the city. E. J. Ryan, who travels for the Foot, Schultz & Co., and D. M. Clark. Mr. Mulrooney is also well known in the city and has many friends. D. M. Clark of the firm D. M. Clark & Co., is perhaps the best known of the three and his large circle of friends in this city will wish him all the success in the world in the new enterprise. The business will be conducted the same as heretofore and Mr. Clark will not leave the city.

R. J. Hartley left this afternoon for Park Rapids on logging business.

Old-Time Exhortation

A bidding prayer was a form of exhortation, always followed by the Lord's prayer, enjoined by the fifty-fifth canon of the Anglican church in 1603, to be used before all sermons and homilies. It was a prayer for the church, the sovereign, various classes of people, and a thanksgiving for the faithful departed. In changed forms, it still survives in modern church services.

PROGRESS OF THE BRAINERD BOYS' CONCERT BAND

By CARL ZAPFFE, JR.

The Brainerd Boys' Concert band is now nearly five years old. Yet, is finds itself to be in a position quite similar to that of two or three years ago when it was comprised of the younger boys entirely. By this I do not mean that the band is composed of raw material and is yet going through the first stages of development, for practically all the boys, though young, are accomplished players and the band has built for itself now a fine reputation as to its success and abilities of instrumentation.

But this last fall, a far greater number of boys than usual left the band, or wished to leave, on account of their going away to school or because of other undertakings requiring their time and effort; and, of course, these boys were the mainstays of the band. However, some of them stayed until after the concert and helped in that way, thus setting the younger boys upon the successful venture which they had themselves launched several years before. But now they have gone, the younger boys are striving with surprising ambition to refill the gaps left by the older ones; nevertheless, great as the task may seem, under the fine leadership of Mr. Becky, they have already proven themselves worthy successors, and are now playing rather difficult music.

However, this present advancement is only the first step in the realization of the band's ambition. It is now their fondest desire to increase the band to sixty members, nearly double what it is now; and as there are yet several months before the concert season begins, right now is the opportune time for a new member to join. If there is an instrument available, or if any boy is already fairly proficient on any band instrument, see Mr. Becky at the Y. M. C. A. the earliest Tuesday night possible from 7 o'clock to 9, or telephone 1124-M. The ability to play a musical instrument is bound to be beneficial to any boy both socially and financially as time goes on.

Do not be skeptical as to a boy's abilities, but let him try some instrument and prove his worth. Mr. Becky is able to secure instruments for boys on exceptionally reasonable payments.

BRAINERD MAN INJURED

M. Nelson Broke Hip; Slipped while Entering Depot at International Falls

M. Nelson, Brainerd resident, broke his hip this week when he slipped and fell while entering the depot at International Falls. He was taken to the Northern Minnesota hospital at International Falls where an examination revealed a fracture of the large bone of the leg just below the hip joint.

5 CAIRO STUDENTS INJURED IN SERIOUS CLASH WITH POLICE

Cairo, March 3. — (UP) — Five students were injured today in a serious clash with police during a demonstration against the proposed British-Egyptian treaty.

The students, on strike from their schools, broke a police cordon that had been drawn around the headquarters of the Wafd, nationalist organization.

The widow of Zaghlul Pasha, revered nationalist leader, appeared on a balcony of the Wafd building and pleaded with the students to disperse.

"Down with the treaty," was all they would reply.

LIVE STOCK

POISONOUS WEEDS WILL KILL SHEEP

The sudden death of one or more sheep in a flock is sometimes caused by their eating poisonous plants which may thrive, unnoticed, along grown-up fence rows, muddy or marshy places, or creek banks.

The more general symptoms of poisoning, according to D. S. Bell, in charge of sheep investigations at the Ohio agricultural experiment station, are frothing at the mouth, colicky spasms, loss of control of feet and legs, head drawn back, and intense agony of pain, indicated by a hard gritting or grinding of the teeth. Death usually occurs three to twenty-four hours after the first symptoms of illness appear.

Treatment in practically all cases of poisoning is useless. The destruction of all poisonous plants in the pasture is the only sure method of preventing loss.

Under certain conditions wild cherry and choke cherry are poisonous to sheep. White snakeroot is quite common in pastures in southeastern Ohio and is a "killer" if eaten in sufficient amount. This plant is a member of the same family as boneset, which it resembles. White hemlock is the most deadly of all, especially if the fleshy, tuberous root is eaten. It thrives only in marshy places and along creek banks. Its anchorage to the ground is so weak that it may be easily pulled out of the marshy soil and the root eaten.

In general sheep do not eat of these poisonous plants, as they are not very palatable. But in early spring when first turned on pasture and again in late summer when the grass becomes dry, sheep are reckless in their grazing and may eat of them. Often sheep just nip these plants, not taking a sufficient amount to cause death, and because of the quick action in these poisons the sickness caused usually goes unnoticed.

Dip Cattle in Autumn to Control Parasites

If your cattle become poor in flesh, lose the hair over the shoulders and neck, and spend considerable time in rubbing and scratching, they are probably infested with lice.

This is especially likely to occur and is usually more prevalent in the young animals. Not only are the animals constantly irritated and lose flesh, but their resistance to other diseases is lowered.

One method of controlling lice is to dip the cattle during the fall and spring. Dipping of cattle is not advisable, however, during the winter months on account of pneumonia. Hand treatment in many cases may relieve the animals until spring when they may be dipped. Three different treatments are commonly used. Equal parts of ground sabadilla seed and flowers of sulphur in the form of a dusting powder is a good treatment. One-half pint of kerosene to one pound of lard makes a good grease treatment. Any of the common coal-tar dips made up in a 3 per cent solution with warm water and then applied with a rag, brush, or spray pump will give some relief.

Time Wasted in Dreams

It is easy to neglect the things we can do in dreaming of the things we might do. Many a day holds undone the homely tasks that need doing, while the one to whom they are committed discontentedly dreams of great deeds that are impossible.—Exchange.

Insect Gardeners

White ants of Indo-China have their own gardens, where they tend what might be called pumpkin patches. These insect gardeners raise microscopic pellets like pumpkins, made of a sort of fungus, somewhat similar to the mold on stale bread. A bed consisting of fragments of leaves and grass is prepared and weeded by the ants. These they chew into fine material into which they place the germs of fungus.

Know Your Sweetheart by His Handwriting

very truly,

The writing of the "go-getter" actually looks as if it was going to get something. It has the signs of force and action. The slant will be medium but the strokes that make up the writing will show decision. They will be made fairly heavy and t bars will be to the right and with pronounced pressure.

Capital letters in the writing of the man or woman with initiative will be large but writing will have the appearance of one who is ambitious and backs up his ideas with action. Ordinarily, large writing means many ideas and an impulsive nature that causes the writer to change his mind and neglect his efforts often. The "go-getter" type often writes words that are connected and frequently omits loops on y's and g's.

There is an absence of flourish about the writing of one who knows what he wants and goes after it.

Margins will be even and writing either on the level or uphill. Terminals will run to the right.

Note.—Do not make final judgment until other signs in writing are studied.

Charles XII

A ROUGH LOOKING boy of fifteen came to the throne of Sweden in 1697, under the title of Charles XII, and started in at once on a cross between the simple and the strenuous life. He gave no sign that he was going to make a name for himself, for he hated the stupid business of state and spent most of his time in hunting and athletics. Nor was there anything very kingly in his looks. His habitual dress was an old blue coat with copper buttons, buffalo skin gloves and huge boots that came above the knees.

In those days of hard drinking and high living his way of life made him a marked man. He drank no wine, ate only coarse bread, and slept on the bare ground covered by a cloak.

Patkul, the wily Lithuanian diplomat, thought the boy king a fool and hit on a plan whereby other countries might take advantage of Charles' carelessness of state affairs. He formed a triple alliance—Russia, Poland and Denmark—against Sweden. Denmark opened operations by invading Swedish territory. Then, for the first time, the world realized what character of king this unkempt, sport-loving boy was destined to be.

For Charles, with a fierceness and vigor no one had dreamed he possessed, drove out the Danes and turned on the two other members of the alliance. He put away forever the pleasant outdoor home life he loved and turned to the wilder sport of hunting men. Russia, following Denmark's lead, had advanced on Narva and the country around the Gulf of Finland. Poland's army had besieged Riga.

Charles, with barely 20,000 men, marched against the 80,000 Russians encamped under the walls of Narva. Then followed one of the strangest and briefest battles in the annals of warfare. Charles, disdaining all known military tactics, "rushed" the enemy's camp, charging headlong into a force four times the size of his own. In less than fifteen minutes he had stormed it. Of the 80,000 soldiers, 30,000 were killed and the rest captured or scattered. Without pausing, Charles hurried his little army across the Dwina, attacked the Saxon army intrenched there and utterly routed it. Then he turned his attention to the Poles. By 1703 all Poland was helpless before the twenty-one-year-old Swedish youth, and three years later he dictated peace terms to his three enemies.

He had these once-powerful foes wholly at his mercy, yet he treated them magnanimously.

Having completely broken up the alliance against Sweden and saved his country, Charles might have been expected to go back with a clear conscience to his old, easy-going mode of life. But his fighting blood was up. The lust of conquest had fired his brain and his former pleasures no longer appealed to him. He planned to crush Russia, and in 1707, with an army 37,000 strong, he marched on Moscow. But instead of going thither direct and striking one decisive blow, as was his custom, he listened to the advice of his ally, the Cossack chief Mazeppa, that he march first through the Ukraine in the hope of inciting the Cossacks to join him. The Ukraine expedition was a failure. In 1709 Charles attacked the rich city of Pultowa and was about to capture it when Czar Peter I of Russia bore down upon him with 70,000 men.

Charles turned eagerly to meet this new foe. But in a preliminary skirmish he received a dangerous wound in the thigh. So, in the battle itself (July 8, 1709), he had to issue his commands from a litter. His troops, deprived of his inspiring presence, and weakened by starvation and fatigue, fell back before the superior Russian force.

His hopes baffled and his army beaten, Charles seemed to have lost all he had hitherto gained. But he wasted no time in despair. To check the Russia invasion, he promptly incited Turkey to war with Russia. The latter country's diplomats, however, persuaded the Turks that Charles had designs against Turkey, and an armed body of men was sent to arrest him.

Charles was still at Varnitza, in Turkish territory, and had a guard of less than 300 Swedes. Yet with this puny force he defied all Turkey. He defended his house against a whole army of Turks and fought off the besiegers until they burned the house over his head. He was captured, fighting, but escaped in disguise and made his way to the fortress of Strelsund. There a mighty army of Russians, Danes, Saxons and Prussians assailed him on December 23, 1715, and by sheer weight of numbers defeated him.

No longer able to win by force he now, for the first time, turned to statecraft. He formed a stupendous plan to win what might in time have amounted to a world empire. His idea, in brief, was to form an alliance with Russia, attack and conquer Norway, from Norway to cross to Scotland, invade Great Britain and dethrone King George I. The scheme almost succeeded. The alliance was made with Russia, Norway was invaded and partly conquered. But, on November 30, 1718, while besieging Fredrikshall, Charles' head was crushed by a cannon ball.

Charles XII was but thirty-six when he died, and with his death Sweden sank from the high power to which his genius and mad courage had raised her.

ED. KRUEGER, Chairman
Fifth District—Crosby

Chairman of the County Board of Commissioners, former mayor of Crosby and hardware merchant, there. This is Mr. Krueger's first term in office on the county board. During his term the board has acted on many favorable measures in the interests of the county. He polled a large vote on the range during his election, signifying the confidence the voters have in him.

Alfalfa for Brood Sow Is Extremely Valuable

It is a well recognized fact that alfalfa is the best hog pasture crop we have. Every hog producer should have a patch of it for that purpose. He should have more than that; he should also provide alfalfa hay for his brood sows as well as for his fall pigs. The fact is that alfalfa hay should be provided for all farm live stock. It can be grown on practically every farm in Iowa, though in most cases liming of the soil will be necessary in order to get a stand, says the Iowa Homstead.

Mature brood sows that are being fed one pound of corn per 100 pounds live weight per day and one-fourth of a pound of tankage per head per day in addition, will eat half to three-fourths of a pound of alfalfa hay daily. The great value derived from the feeding of it lies in the fact that it gives bulk to the ration and because it furnishes protein, mineral matter and vitamines. Its vitamine content seems to be extremely valuable.

Plan to Prevent More Common Diseases of Hogs

If all hog producers were thoroughly conversant with the known facts about worms and the more common hog diseases, and then followed the methods of feeding and handling of the brood sows and their pigs known to be the best, there would seldom be need for worming and dipping of the pigs. Unfortunately, however, such is not the case. The vast majority of farmers are still raising their pigs in lots that have been used for that purpose for ten to twenty or more years which are therefore literally filled with worm eggs and disease germs.

Live Stock Facts

This is the time of the year to be on the lookout for the spread of hog cholera.

Many pigs are lost at farrowing time because they become chilled immediately after they are born.

An animal carcass should be thoroughly cooled before it freezes. Select a favorable day for slaughtering.

Hog cholera is a contagious disease of swine which is caused by a definite germ or micro-organism. Along with it comes a high fever, but fortunately the disease does not affect other animals or man.

Forage crops for growing and fattening pigs will increase the rate of gain and result in more economical gains.

It is a well-recognized fact that alfalfa is the best hog pasture crop we have. Every hog producer should have a patch of it for that purpose.

Animals intended for slaughter should be held without feed 18 or 24 hours before killing, but they should be given all the fresh water they will drink.

Know Your Sweetheart by His Handwriting

By EDNA PURDY WALSH
Editor, Character Reading Magazine.

The Go-Getter

The writing of the "go-getter" actually looks as if it was going to get something. It has the signs of force and action. The slant will be medium but the strokes that make up the writing will show decision. They will be made fairly heavy and t bars will be to the right and with pronounced pressure.

Capital letters in the writing of the man or woman with initiative will be large but writing will have the appearance of one who is ambitious and backs up his ideas with action. Ordinarily, large writing means many ideas and an impulsive nature that causes the writer to change his mind and neglect his efforts often. The "go-getter" type often writes words that are connected and frequently omits loops on y's and g's.

There is an absence of flourish about the writing of one who knows what he wants and goes after it.

Margins will be even and writing either on the level or uphill. Terminals will run to the right.

Note.—Do not make final judgment until other signs in writing are studied.

THE WORLD'S GREAT EVENTS

Charles XII

A ROUGH LOOKING boy of fifteen came to the throne of Sweden in 1697, under the title of Charles XII, and started in at once on a cross between the simple and the strenuous life. He gave no sign that he was going to make a name for himself, for he hated the stupid business of state and spent most of his time in hunting and athletics. Nor was there anything very kingly in his looks. His habitual dress was an old blue coat with copper buttons, buffalo skin gloves and huge boots that came above the knees.

In those days of hard drinking and high living his way of life made him a marked man. He drank no wine, ate only coarse bread, and slept on the bare ground covered by a cloak.

Patkul, the wily Lithuanian diplomat, thought the boy king a fool and hit on a plan whereby other countries might take advantage of Charles' carelessness of state affairs. He formed a triple alliance—Russia, Poland and Denmark—against Sweden. Denmark opened operations by invading Swedish territory. Then, for the first time, the world realized what character of king this unkempt, sport-loving boy was destined to be.

For Charles, with a fierceness and vigor no one had dreamed he possessed, drove out the Danes and turned on the two other members of the alliance. He put away forever the pleasant outdoor home life he loved and turned to the wilder sport of hunting men. Russia, following Denmark's lead, had advanced on Narva and the country around the Gulf of Finland. Poland's army had besieged Riga.

Charles, with barely 20,000 men, marched against the 80,000 Russians encamped under the walls of Narva. Then followed one of the strangest and briefest battles in the annals of warfare. Charles, disdaining all known military tactics, "rushed" the enemy's camp, charging headlong into a force four times the size of his own. In less than fifteen minutes he had stormed it. Of the 80,000 soldiers, 30,000 were killed and the rest captured or scattered. Without pausing, Charles hurried his little army across the Dwina, attacked the Saxon army intrenched there and utterly routed it. Then he turned his attention to the Poles. By 1703 all Poland was helpless before the twenty-one-year-old Swedish youth, and three years later he dictated peace terms to his three enemies.

He had these once-powerful foes wholly at his mercy, yet he treated them magnanimously.

Having completely broken up the alliance against Sweden and saved his country, Charles might have been expected to go back with a clear conscience to his old, easy-going mode of life. But his fighting blood was up. The lust of conquest had fired his brain and his former pleasures no longer appealed to him. He planned to crush Russia, and in 1707, with an army 37,000 strong, he marched on Moscow. But instead of going thither direct and striking one decisive blow, as was his custom, he listened to the advice of his ally, the Cossack chief Mazeppa, that he march first through the Ukraine in the hope of inciting the Cossacks to join him. The Ukraine expedition was a failure. In 1709 Charles attacked the rich city of Pultowa and was about to capture it when Czar Peter I of Russia bore down upon him with 70,000 men.

Charles turned eagerly to meet this new foe. But in a preliminary skirmish he received a dangerous wound in the thigh. So, in the battle itself (July 8, 1709), he had to issue his commands from a litter. His troops, deprived of his inspiring presence, and weakened by starvation and fatigue, fell back before the superior Russian force.

His hopes baffled and his army beaten, Charles seemed to have lost all he had hitherto gained. But he wasted no time in despair. To check the Russia invasion, he promptly incited Turkey to war with Russia. The latter country's diplomats, however, persuaded the Turks that Charles had designs against Turkey, and an armed body of men was sent to arrest him.

Charles was still at Varnitza, in Turkish territory, and had a guard of less than 300 Swedes. Yet with this puny force he defied all Turkey. He defended his house against a whole army of Turks and fought off the besiegers until they burned the house over his head. He was captured, fighting, but escaped in disguise and made his way to the fortress of Strelsund. There a mighty army of Russians, Danes, Saxons and Prussians assailed him on December 23, 1715, and by sheer weight of numbers defeated him.

No longer able to win by force he now, for the first time, turned to statecraft. He formed a stupendous plan to win what might in time have amounted to a world empire. His idea, in brief, was to form an alliance with Russia, attack and conquer Norway, from Norway to cross to Scotland, invade Great Britain and dethrone King George I. The scheme almost succeeded. The alliance was made with Russia, Norway was invaded and partly conquered. But, on November 30, 1718, while besieging Fredrikshall, Charles' head was crushed by a cannon ball.

Charles XII was but thirty-six when he died, and with his death Sweden sank from the high power to which his genius and mad courage had raised her.

Alfalfa for Brood Sow Is Extremely Valuable

It is a well recognized fact that alfalfa is the best hog pasture crop we have. Every hog producer should have a patch of it for that purpose. He should have more than that; he should also provide alfalfa hay for his brood sows as well as for his fall pigs. The fact is that alfalfa hay should be provided for all farm live stock. It can be grown on practically every farm in Iowa, though in most cases liming of the soil will be necessary in order to get a stand, says the Iowa Homstead.

Mature brood sows that are being fed one pound of corn per 100 pounds live weight per day and one-fourth of a pound of tankage per head per day in addition, will eat half to three-fourths of a pound of alfalfa hay daily. The great value derived from the feeding of it lies in the fact that it gives bulk to the ration and because it furnishes protein, mineral matter and vitamines. Its vitamine content seems to be extremely valuable.

Plan to Prevent More Common Diseases of Hogs

If all hog producers were thoroughly conversant with the known facts about worms and the more common hog diseases, and then followed the methods of feeding and handling of the brood sows and their pigs known to be the best, there would seldom be need for worming and dipping of the pigs. Unfortunately, however, such is not the case. The vast majority of farmers are still raising their pigs in lots that have been used for that purpose for ten to twenty or more years which are therefore literally filled with worm eggs and disease germs.

Live Stock Facts

This is the time of the year to be on the lookout for the spread of hog cholera.

Many pigs are lost at farrowing time because they become chilled immediately after they are born.

An animal carcass should be thoroughly cooled before it freezes. Select a favorable day for slaughtering.

Hog cholera is a contagious disease of swine which is caused by a definite germ or micro-organism. Along with it comes a high fever, but fortunately the disease does not affect other animals or man.

Forage crops for growing and fattening pigs will increase the rate of gain and result in more economical gains.

It is a well-recognized fact that alfalfa is the best hog pasture crop we have. Every hog producer should have a patch of it for that purpose.

• • •

Animals intended for slaughter should be held without feed 18 or 24 hours before killing, but they should be given all the fresh water they will drink.

MASTER FARM HOMEMAKERS

NORTH DAKOTA has recognized its master farm homemakers. That reminds us that at St. Paul, where honors were paid the master farmers, August Nelson, representative of Crow Wing county, gained much praise. However, when he gave a radio talk, he gave all the credit for his success as a farmer to his wife and paid her the highest compliments.

The Minneapolis Tribune editor states that the four North Dakota women who were honored Thursday night at Fargo as master farm homemakers are outstanding in their realm, yet it is nice to believe that they are fairly typical of, rather than brilliant exceptions to, the vast body of women they represent. The purpose which lies behind their signal recognition is not so much to honor the individual farm homemaker as to give full credit to the farm home as a vital major factor in the agricultural industry. This the farm home has been since the first crude makeshift plow prepared the first farm plat for seed, yet it is only recently that we have come to see that the homemaker, no less than the farmer, makes her immeasurable contributions to the success of agricultural enterprise.

A glance over the records of North Dakota's master farm homemakers is sufficient to convince one that their titles are worthily bestowed. These are the women honored, and without exception they have established sturdy home ideals and looked to them faithfully and unswervingly:

Mrs. C. E. Erickson of Crosby.
Mrs. W. F. Bellamy of Drayton.
Mrs. T. J. Kelsh of Fullerton.
Mrs. W. H. Buhr of Buffalo.

Each of these women has contributed mightily to the high standards of an efficient farm and an efficient home. Take their individual achievements, blend them slightly, and you are rewarded with a very excellent composite photograph of the master farm homemaker. You will find that she is a good mother, zealous of her children's health, insistent on their adequate education, careful to stress the place of thrift and industry in the scheme of life. You will find her manifesting an active interest in and an intelligent understanding of the factors which make the farm a going concern. You will notice that she is not content with an efficient farm plant, but sees to it that beauyt and comfort have their proper stress in softening the austere outlines of industry. You will note, too, that her vision extends beyond the home to the community, and that her varied and constructive interests embrace church and club, welfare and farm organizations, and the all-important duties of citizenship.

All honor to Mrs. Erickson, Mrs. Bellamy, Mrs. Kelsh and Mrs. Buhr. Their honors are the brighter because they did not labor for them, but merely gave themselves, generously and devotedly, to the precious tasks of homemaking. The farm is a finer institution because it has been leavened, through the centuries, with the love and care and selflessness of women such as these.

"A ROSE BY ANY OTHER NAME"

THE Fergus Falls Tribune carries a story regarding an American citizen, of typical makeup, Arthur H. Sapp, president of International Rotary.

This leader of over 150,000 business men in 44 countries has vision and enthusiasm; has the ability to speak to the point without so-called "oratory"; has energy and clear headedness.

Above all, he has humor, and while he takes his position seriously he does not take himself so much so as to spoil his usefulness to his fellow clubmen.

Mr. Sapp was a speaker at the Minneapolis club last week, on his way to Winnipeg, to attend the "international good will" anniversary there. He began by saying that he sometimes felt himself verging on dangerous self-conflict, when great numbers of Rotarians rose to acclaim him, but that thus far he had been saved from the bottomless pit by two things. The first, he said, was his recollection of the saying, that "self conceit is the anaesthetic which prevents its victim from knowing what a perfect damn fool he is."

"The second," he went on, "is my name."

After the tumult died down, he added: "Coming back from Belgium last summer, with hundreds of other Rotarians, I was accosted on the ship by one of them who said he had been eager to meet me, and shake hands, and exchange condolences. I said I would be glad to know his name, and learn what our joint sorrow was. 'My name,' he said, 'is I. A. Nutt,' and we mingled our tears."

Very few of us Americans can keep self esteem down, by names like A. Sapp and I. A. Nutt; but everyone of us can, when temptation comes, fight off the anaesthesia of big headedness.

THE TOURNAMENT

BASKETBALL tournaments give free play to the enthusiasm of partisan crowds. The scene at the close of the Brainerd-Staples game last night was a mad scramble with Brainerd fans doing a war dance on the floor. The average basketball fan is so keyed up with excitement that it must find an outlet in slapping or thumping his neighbor.

If this excitement keeps up much longer there will be about 2,000 sore throats in Brainerd and Crosby-Ironton. The cheer leaders are showing the wear and tear of the games. Last night William Johnstone had a hard time of it. Every time he issued his instructions, and he was leading a lot of adults who wanted to yell along with the high school students, the Staples brass band or rooters would get the tip off and run away with the yelling.

So far no spectator has died of heart disease, but if we have any more close games like the Brainerd-Staples 11-10 mixup, we know some who may have to be treated or revived.

BRAINERD is the logical point to hold the basketball tournaments. Our city is just 30 miles from Staples, 30 miles from Little Falls, 30 miles from Pine River and 30 miles from Aitkin. We have everything for holding a tournament, with the all important exception of a building to house the play.

SOME of the most difficult driving is experienced on city streets here in Brainerd and in other towns where deep ruts still persist. The country roads, on the other hand, due to proper snow removal, are generally clear of ruts.

THERE seems "to be quite a fight on" to put through treaties outlawing war. The last war, you will remember, was fought to end war.

Dolores Costello in "OLD SAN FRANCISCO" is a Warner Bros. picturization of this novel.

SYNOPSIS

Buckwell, San Francisco boss, seeks to secure valuable Vasquez ranch by guile and force. His lawyer's nephew, Terry, loves Dolores Vasquez and helps save the ranch. Buckwell tries in vain to wreck their love affair. Old Vasquez dies as result of Buckwell's persecution. Dolores and Terry disclose Buckwell as a Chinaman in effort to avenge Vasquez's death, but are kidnapped by Buckwell and held prisoners.

Chapter XVI—Continued

"We will not talk of him!" observed Buckwell with curt finality. His eyes, that had been scrutinizing her so absorbingly, noticed the exquisite jade piece presented by Lu Fong. It made a gorgeous big blotch of green against Dolores' black gown. Buckwell drew in his breath sharply. "There is only one man in Frisco who has jade like that—Lu Fong—the damnable trouble maker!" His eyes narrowed angrily, and, rising quickly, he snatched it from Dolores' neck and tossed it contemptuously to Jimmy and the Texas Kid, who stood dutifully in the background waiting for their chief's next orders.

They examined the exquisitely carved stone, snapped it in two, and each took half. The jade recarved, together with the bag of gold Buckwell had given them to divide, made their night's profit good pickings. They were more than satisfied.

"Stay where you are, my proud, brave girl."

Turning back to Dolores with a suave smile, Buckwell indicated the floor overhead. "In the chamber above," he said, "wait those to whom you told a certain story last night."

Dolores' eyes lighted up with hope. She felt that if Lu Fong had come to capture Buckwell there would be a chance for her deliverance and an opportunity to find out about Terry.

Noting her suppressed excitement, Buckwell continued: "It won't do you any good! You are now about to find it your duty to tell these same yellow gentlemen that your accusations regarding me were false."

Buckwell paused for effect, but it was not necessary. Dolores was aghast at his audacity. Nevertheless, an unconscious sigh escaped her lips. It was a relief to know why she had been kidnapped and if Buckwell wanted her to again face the Tong men he would probably require Terry's presence, too, which meant they had not killed him.

Dolores smiled nervously. It was the only vent she dared give her relief. But her thoughts were absorbed in trying to devise some plan to elude Buckwell's hypnotic eye and get out of his underground den. She was fully determined not to play into his hand by lying. The whole purpose of the trip that had developed into a series of hideous experiences was to wreak vengeance upon Buckwell, not to do favors for him.

"When you are brought in to face the Tong leaders," continued Buckwell, glaring at her menacingly, "I want you to swear that your statement about me was merely the delusion of a grief stricken brain."

Dolores returned Buckwell's gaze in silent, contemptuous defiance.

"Is that clear?" he asked loudly. "You understand what you are to do?"

Buckwell was accustomed to being obeyed, and Dolores was not accustomed to such rude insistence. It was a bad combination.

"I will not say that!" Her determined voice gave no indication of the fear that engulfed her. Her beautiful young lips were curled in scorn.

"You are proud, aren't you?" taunted Buckwell, with a forced laugh. "Why are you Spanish Vasquezs superior to the rest of us? Bah!" He answered himself as Dolores stood erect, with angry eyes flashing dangerously. "You're no better than I am, except that your noble family faces death bravely. We will see if you are as fine and courageous as you think." He stood before her and said slowly, "There is—something you will not face so coldly!"

Afraid of being touched, Dolores retreated to the other side of a large chair and watched Buckwell with eyes of terror.

Turning quickly to Jimmie and the Texas Kid, he said, "Bring him in!"

As they disappeared behind a large manifold screen a blood curdling yell filled the room. Dolores screamed aloud in terror and her heart almost stopped beating.

It was the dwarf. He had been listening intently to every word and yelled out in wild excitement to make Dolores look in his direction.

She did, and recoiled in panic at the sight of his hideous face and twisted body leering at her from the barred cage in the wall.

"Shut up!" said Buckwell in a stern voice, hurling a book in his direction.

It fell on the floor, but that did not matter; it had served to silence the dwarf. However, he continued to listen and watch, not missing anything that transpired in the shrine room. His powers of observation were keen and he knew more about his renegade brother's affairs and the workings of the underground doors than the latter imagined.

The scuffling of feet drew Dolores' attention to the other side of the room. Not knowing what to expect, but hoping against hope it was the men returning with Terry, she whirled about.

"Terry!" she cried, with a mingling of relief and love, and rushed toward him impulsively.

"Stay where you are, my proud, brave girl," said Buckwell, grasping her wrist in a vice-like grip that hurt and infuriated her.

It would do Dolores no good to speak, and Terry was incapable of utterance. Still bound and gagged, he looked at her with a world of questions, misgivings and love in his pain filled eyes. His mouth was bleeding. There was a cruel gash on his forehead that had not had attention. His clothes were dusty, bloody and mussed. Her heart went out to him in compassion. She thanked God that he was alive and longed to do something to relieve his suffering.

Buckwell seemed to derive a cruel satisfaction from watching the young lovers' anguish. It was his revenge for the thrashing Terry had given him at the Crystal Palace, but his merciless brain suddenly decided the score was not yet even and he gave a quiet order to Jimmie, then drew back and watched Dolores.

The man threw Terry on his face. Jimmie took his neck, the Texas Kid grasped his feet, and they began bending him backward with brutal steadiness.

Terry's face turned livid red and moist from the pain.

The dwarf screamed and rattled the bars of his prison.

"Stop! Stop! Oh, don't!" cried Dolores in anguish, and, rushing to Terry, threw herself on the floor beside him and tried to touch his face with loving hands.

"Let him go!" she screamed, and in reaching up tried to push Jimmie away. She even clawed frantically at his hands, but he paid no attention to her entreaties and continued the slow pull backward that was almost tearing Terry's muscles from bones that could not stand much more strain.

"Make them stop!" entreated Dolores, appealing to Buckwell with tear filled eyes.

"So—you are afraid of death, aren't you?" commented Buckwell, with a calm smile.

"Oh, you—you cruel beast!" sobbed Dolores. "Please, please make them stop! They'll kill him!"

"That will do." Buckwell raised his voice and motioned his men to desist.

They released Terry, and he writhed on the floor in agony.

"Well," inquired Buckwell threateningly of Dolores, "will you tell the Tong men above what I wish or shall we continue to prepare your young man for his grave?"

"Oh!" Dolores groaned in mental torment and pressed icy cold fingers against her throbbing temples. She knew that if she obeyed Buckwell by lying to the Tong leaders Terry would be safe, but her Grandfather's death would go unavenged. She was the last of the Vasquezs and had taken a sacred oath beside her Grandfather's dead body to uphold the honor of their name. She could not do it by lying. While, on the other hand, she could not endure being responsible for Terry's murder. She loved him, and he was all she had in the world.

"Oh, dear God—dear God," she prayed, "what shall I do?"

It's the money you spend wisely that counts

Someone has said that a rich man has more fun keeping a budget than a man of moderate means. Because the money he saves is tangible, he can see it and invest it, and put it to work. Be that as it may, a budget is an invaluable help to anyone.

A budget helps you keep the right proportions between expenses, prevents you from spending more than is best for food and rent, or crimping more than you should on entertainment and luxury. But a budget is not a reason for getting cheap things, things in which you forfeit quality by attempting to save on price. A budget says to you: "Here is the amount of money you should spend for this. Spend all of it, but don't spend more." And it is up to you to get the best that can be got for that amount.

The person who spends his money wisely, who likes to get the utmost for it, always finds out from advertisements how he can spend it to the best advantage.

It is surprising how much more wisely you can buy if you make it a habit to read advertising. A little more value here . . . a little better workmanship there . . . in this thing slightly more durability . . . that product perhaps a bit finer. And every cent of money you spend for advertised merchandise will bring you greater comfort, a higher quality of goods, and a standard of excellence that is nationally recognized.

It certainly pays to read the advertisements

Above all, he has humor, and while he takes his position seriously he does not take himself so much so as to spoil his usefulness to his fellow clubmen.

Mr. Sapp was a speaker at the Minneapolis club last week, on his way to Winnipeg, to attend the "international good will" anniversary there. He began by saying that he sometimes felt himself verging on dangerous self-conflict, when great numbers of Rotarians rose to acclaim him, but that thus far he had been saved from the bottomless pit by two things. The first, he said, was his recollection of the saying, that "self conceit is the anaesthetic which prevents its victim from knowing what a perfect damn fool he is."

"The second," he went on, "is my name."

After the tumult died down, he added: "Coming back from Belgium last summer, with hundreds of other Rotarians, I was accosted on the ship by one of them who said he had been eager to meet me, and shake hands, and exchange condolences. I said I would be glad to know his name, and learn what our joint sorrow was. 'My name,' he said, 'is I. A. Nutt,' and we mingled our tears."

Very few of us Americans can keep self esteem down, by names like A. Sapp and I. A. Nutt; but everyone of us can, when temptation comes, fight off the anaesthesia of big headedness.

THE TOURNAMENT

BASKETBALL tournaments give free play to the enthusiasm of partisan crowds. The scene at the close of the Brainerd-Staples game last night was a mad scramble with Brainerd fans doing a war dance on the floor. The average basketball fan is so keyed up with excitement that it must find an outlet in slapping or thumping his neighbor.

If this excitement keeps up much longer there will be about 2,000 sore throats in Brainerd and Crosby-Ironton. The cheer leaders are showing the wear and tear of the games. Last night William Johnstone had a hard time of it. Every time he issued his instructions, and he was leading a lot of adults who wanted to yell along with the high school students, the Staples brass band or rooters would get the tip off and run away with the yelling.

So far no spectator has died of heart disease, but if we have any more close games like the Brainerd-Staples 11-10 mixup, we know some who may have to be treated or revived.

BRAINERD is the logical point to hold the basketball tournaments. Our city is just 30 miles from Staples, 30 miles from Little Falls, 30 miles from Pine River and 30 miles from Aitkin. We have everything for holding a tournament, with the all important exception of a building to house the play.

SOME of the most difficult driving is experienced on city streets here in Brainerd and in other towns where deep ruts still persist. The country roads, on the other hand, due to proper snow removal, are generally clear of ruts.

THERE seems "to be quite a fight on" to put through treaties outlawing war. The last war, you will remember, was fought to end war.

Dolores Costello in "OLD SAN FRANCISCO" is a Warner Bros. picturization of this novel.

SYNOPSIS

Buckwell, San Francisco boss, seeks to secure valuable Vasquez ranch by guile and force. His lawyer's nephew, Terry, loves Dolores Vasquez and helps save the ranch. Buckwell tries in vain to wreck their love affair. Old Vasquez dies as result of Buckwell's persecution. Dolores and Terry disclose Buckwell as a Chinaman in effort to avenge Vasquez's death, but are kidnapped by Buckwell and held prisoners.

"We will not talk of him!" observed Buckwell with curt finality. His eyes, that had been scrutinizing her so absorbingly, noticed the exquisite jade piece presented by Lu Fong. It made a gorgeous big blotch of green against Dolores' black gown. Buckwell drew in his breath sharply. "There is only one man in Frisco who has jade like that—Lu Fong—the damnable trouble maker!" His eyes narrowed angrily, and, rising quickly, he snatched it from Dolores' neck and tossed it contemptuously to Jimmy and the Texas Kid, who stood dutifully in the background waiting for their chief's next orders.

They examined the exquisitely carved stone, snapped it in two, and each took half. The jade recarved, together with the bag of gold Buckwell had given them to divide, made their night's profit good pickings. They were more than satisfied.

Turning back to Dolores with a suave smile, Buckwell indicated the floor overhead. "In the chamber above," he said, "wait those to whom you told a certain story last night."

Dolores' eyes lighted up with hope. She felt that if Lu Fong had come to capture Buckwell there would be a chance for her deliverance and an opportunity to find out about Terry.

Noting her suppressed excitement, Buckwell continued: "It won't do you any good! You are now about to find it your duty to tell these same yellow gentlemen that your accusations regarding me were false."

Buckwell paused for effect, but it was not necessary. Dolores was aghast at his audacity. Nevertheless, an unconscious sigh escaped her lips. It was a relief to know why she had been kidnapped and if Buckwell wanted her to again face the Tong men he would probably require Terry's presence, too, which meant they had not killed him.

Dolores smiled nervously. It was the only vent she dared give her relief. But her thoughts were absorbed in trying to devise some plan to elude Buckwell's hypnotic eye and get out of his underground den. She was fully determined not to play into his hand by lying. The whole purpose of the trip that had developed into a series of hideous experiences was to wreak vengeance upon Buckwell, not to do favors for him.

"When you are brought in to face the Tong leaders," continued Buckwell, glaring at her menacingly, "I want you to swear that your statement about me was merely the delusion of a grief stricken brain."

Dolores returned Buckwell's gaze in silent, contemptuous defiance.

"Is that clear?" he asked loudly. "You understand what you are to do?"

Buckwell was accustomed to being obeyed, and Dolores was not accustomed to such rude insistence. It was a bad combination.

"I will not say that!" Her determined voice gave no indication of the fear that engulfed her. Her beautiful young lips were curled in scorn.

"You are proud, aren't you?" taunted Buckwell, with a forced laugh. "Why are you Spanish Vasquezs superior to the rest of us? Bah!" He answered himself as Dolores stood erect, with angry eyes flashing dangerously. "You're no better than I am, except that your noble family faces death bravely. We will see if you are as fine and courageous as you think." He stood before her and said slowly, "There is—something you will not face so coldly!"

Afraid of being touched, Dolores retreated to the other side of a large chair and watched Buckwell with eyes of terror.

Turning quickly to Jimmie and the Texas Kid, he said, "Bring him in!"

As they disappeared behind a large manifold screen a blood curdling yell filled the room. Dolores screamed aloud in terror and her heart almost stopped beating.

It was the dwarf. He had been listening intently to every word and yelled out in wild excitement to make Dolores look in his direction.

"Shut up!" said Buckwell in a stern voice, hurling a book in his direction.

It fell on the floor, but that did not matter; it had served to silence the dwarf. However, he continued to listen and watch, not missing anything that transpired in the shrine room. His powers of observation were keen and he knew more about his renegade brother's affairs and the workings of the underground doors than the latter imagined.

The scuffling of feet drew Dolores' attention to the other side of the room. Not knowing what to expect, but hoping against hope it was the men returning with Terry, she whirled about.

"Terry!" she cried, with a mingling of relief and love, and rushed toward him impulsively.

"Stay where you are, my proud, brave girl," said Buckwell, grasping her wrist in a vice-like grip that hurt and infuriated her.

It would do Dolores no good to speak, and Terry was incapable of utterance. Still bound and gagged, he looked at her with a world of questions, misgivings and love in his pain filled eyes. His mouth was bleeding. There was a cruel gash on his forehead that had not had attention. His clothes were dusty, bloody and mussed. Her heart went out to him in compassion. She thanked God that he was alive and longed to do something to relieve his suffering.

Buckwell seemed to derive a cruel satisfaction from watching the young lovers' anguish. It was his revenge for the thrashing Terry had given him at the Crystal Palace, but his merciless brain suddenly decided the score was not yet even and he gave a quiet order to Jimmie, then drew back and watched Dolores.

The man threw Terry on his face. Jimmie took his neck, the Texas Kid grasped his feet, and they began bending him backward with brutal steadiness.

Terry's face turned livid red and moist from the pain.

The dwarf screamed and rattled the bars of his prison.

"Stop! Stop! Oh, don't!" cried Dolores in anguish, and, rushing to Terry, threw herself on the floor beside him and tried to touch his face with loving hands.

"Let him go!" she screamed, and in reaching up tried to push Jimmie away. She even clawed frantically at his hands, but he paid no attention to her entreaties and continued the slow pull backward that was almost tearing Terry's muscles from bones that could not stand much more strain.

"Make them stop!" entreated Dolores, appealing to Buckwell with tear filled eyes.

"So—you are afraid of death, aren't you?" commented Buckwell, with a calm smile.

"Oh, you—you cruel beast!" sobbed Dolores. "Please, please make them stop! They'll kill him!"

"That will do." Buckwell raised his voice and motioned his men to desist.

They released Terry, and he writhed on the floor in agony.

"Well," inquired Buckwell threateningly of Dolores, "will you tell the Tong men above what I wish or shall we continue to prepare your young man for his grave?"

"Oh!" Dolores groaned in mental torment and pressed icy cold fingers against her throbbing temples. She knew that if she obeyed Buckwell by lying to the Tong leaders Terry would be safe, but her Grandfather's death would go unavenged. She was the last of the Vasquezs and had taken a sacred oath beside her Grandfather's dead body to uphold the honor of their name. She could not do it by lying. While, on the other hand, she could not endure being responsible for Terry's murder. She loved him, and he was all she had in the world.

"Oh, dear God—dear God," she prayed, "what shall I do?"

It's the money you spend wisely that counts

Someone has said that a rich man has more fun keeping a budget than a man of moderate means. Because the money he saves is tangible, he can see it and invest it, and put it to work. Be that as it may, a budget is an invaluable help to anyone.

A budget helps you keep the right proportions between expenses, prevents you from spending more than is best for food and rent, or crimping more than you should on entertainment and luxury. But a budget is not a reason for getting cheap things, things in which you forfeit quality by attempting to save on price. A budget says to you: "Here is the amount of money you should spend for this. Spend all of it, but don't spend more." And it is up to you to get the best that can be got for that amount.

The person who spends his money wisely, who likes to get the utmost for it, always finds out from advertisements how he can spend it to the best advantage.

It is surprising how much more wisely you can buy if you make it a habit to read advertising. A little more value here . . . a little better workmanship there . . . in this thing slightly more durability . . . that product perhaps a bit finer. And every cent of money you spend for advertised merchandise will bring you greater comfort, a higher quality of goods, and a standard of excellence that is nationally recognized.

It certainly pays to read the advertisements

"From January 1 to December 31, 1927, I have made 220 inspections, 67 underground, 59 open pit, 29 dumps, 27 plants, and 38 to the active mines of the district," said Mr. Nowell.

Fur Not Highly Prized

The fur-bearing animal, the fisher, is found in forested and uncivilized parts of Canada, and the northern United States, where it formerly ranged southward to Tennessee. Its fur in winter is good and is much sought in Europe. These animals are caught without difficulty in large traps baited with meat. The biological survey says that very few people raise the fisher. The demand for the fur is rather steady, but not great.

Formulation of a tentative program for the Third Annual Roundup to be held at Staples on June 4, 5, at which time the coveted Black Hawk trophy will be competed for by troops in the area, is being made with the motive in mind of making the event the greatest in its short history.

Previously the roundup had been held at Lum Park, Brainerd, with wonderful success.

The contests and awards will be given on a new basis this year. Ribbons will be given for first, second and third places in each event. Efficiency ribbons will be given to each patrol which meets the qualifications as listed for each of the twelve events given below. The Black Hawk trophy will be awarded on the same basis as previously.

The contest standards are as follows:

1. CAMP MAKING—Neatly set up, well arranged, beds made, fire going and water boiling—twenty-five minutes. Prizes to be announced at close of second day, cleanliness during and after striking camp to count.

2. KNOT TYING—The original nine knots to be used. All knots must be tied correctly in order to place. Time—two minutes.

3. WATER BOILING—Two contestants equipped with one hand axe and one knife. Water must boil over the edge within one minute after—first place.

4. SIGNALING — The correct message must be received at the rate of thirty letters per minute Semaphore Code or fifteen letters per minute Morse Code.

5. WALL SCALING — Run twenty feet, go over the wall, finish twenty feet. Time—two minutes. Dimensions of wall—9 feet 6 inches high, 9 feet wide.

6. FIRST AID—The correct treatment must be given. Neat, tight bandages must be placed. Team disqualified if patient handled roughly. Time—six minutes.

7. ARCTIC EXPLORER'S LAST HOPE RACE (Fire-by-friction)—One minute.

8. COOKING—Each patrol will prepare the following dishes; hunter's stew and rice pudding with raisins. The following dishes are optional but desirable: biscuits, potatoes and cocoa.

9. BUGLING—First call, reveille, mess, to the color, assembly, swimming call, retreat, call to quarters, taps. The contest to be judged on accuracy and tone.

10. ARCHERY — There will be two rounds of five arrows each. Scouts must make fifty out of a possible one hundred points.

11. COMPASS AND PACE—Eight scouts participate, one compass used. Scout must know length of pace. Instructions will be issued similar to the following examples: No. 1, 200 feet NW; No. 2, 40 yards SE., etc. Ribbons awarded to patrol ending within eight feet of finish stake.

12. GAMES—(a) Message relay, details of message transmitted; (b) Antelope race, completed without break; (c) 50 yard relay, completed in sportsmanshiplike manner.

NORTH PRAIRIE

The home of Ralph Vosburg was destroyed by fire last week. Mr. Vosburg built a fire early and returned to bed again. When he got up the pipes were red hot and having only the stove pipe through the roof for a chimney the building was soon in flames. The occupants escaped and found refuge with neighbors but the house with all its contents was destroyed.

Sunday callers at the W. G. Peterson home were Mr. and Mrs. I. L. Tomlinson and children, Mr. and Mrs. E. J. Peterson and daughter, Mrs. Amelia Peterson, Gladys Schone and Sidney Skillings.

Friends are sorry to hear that Mrs. Fred Foy is ill at the St. Joseph's hospital in Brainerd.

Mrs. Willard Dixon, who has been sick at her home for some time, has also been taken to the hospital. All wish them both a rapid recovery.

Claude Shannon and Walter Peterson attended the Masonic banquet on Washington's birthday.

COMMISSIONERS ACCEPT REPORT

Report of Mining Inspector Reginald Nowell for Year 1927 Interesting

INCREASE IN FATALS

Decided Decrease However Shown in the Number of Lost Time Shifts

The County Board of Commissioners today accepted the yearly report of Mining Inspector Reginald Nowell for the year 1927.

The report just published in booklet form by the Brainerd Daily Dispatch carries an interesting account of the activities of Crow Wing county mines during the past year, showng a varied progress in operation and employment.

Of interest today is the announcement of the prospective active operation of the Merritt mine operated by the Manganiferous Iron Company which started last Monday.

"There were four fatalities in 1927 and 181 lost time accidents, a big increase on the fatals, also an increase on the number of lost time accidents, but we also show a decided decrease in the number of lost shifts.

"From January 1 to December 31, 1927, I have made 220 inspections, 67 underground, 59 open pit, 29 dumps, 27 plants, and 38 to the active mines of the district," said Mr. Nowell.

Fur Not Highly Prized

The fur-bearing animal, the fisher, is found in forested and uncivilized parts of Canada, and the northern United States, where it formerly ranged southward to Tennessee. Its fur in winter is good and is much sought in Europe. These animals are caught without difficulty in large traps baited with meat. The biological survey says that very few people raise the fisher. The demand for the fur is rather steady, but not great.

BRAINERD WINS GAME IN LAST 90 SECONDS

WISE, HAUTALA SINK BASKETS TO OVERCOME LEAD

TENSE GAME WITH STAPLES COMES TO EXCITING CLOSE; COUNT, 11 TO 10

CROSBY-IRONTON DEFEATS WADENA, 22-15, TO ENTER FINALS TONIGHT

Brainerd pulled a nerve wracking game out of the fire in the last 90 seconds of play last night, winning from Staples by one point in the closest and most exciting game of the district tournament so far.

When the gun boomed to close the game, the score book showed: Brainerd, 11; Staples, 10. In those last dark two minutes of play it looked as if Brainerd's hopes to enter the finals had been shattered. It was a tense moment. Brainerd fans were hysterical. Ninety seconds to play and Staples was leading by three points. The seconds started to fly and so did the Brainerd players. With incredible speed, fighting with every ounce of their strength, Brainerd worked its way through to the Staples territory.

Guin's shot rolled around the hoop and came out. Hautala came in, recovered the ball and dropped it through the meshes. Ten seconds later Wise got the ball, dribbled through and caromed the horsehide off the backboard in a beautiful score. It won the game for the locals. The locals then reverted to their stalling play for the remainder of the thirty seconds, but with only ten seconds to play, Wise in his over anxiousness to keep the opponents from securing a basket, fouled a Staples player. Five seconds after the Staples player had missed the foul shot the game came to a close.

The locals failed to find themselves last night. They missed basket after basket and sunk only three foul shots, while Staples sunk six free throws and two field goals. Wise found the cage for two field goals and two free throws. Guin took one field goal, Gabiou one free throw and Hautala one field basket.

Boardway, captain of the Staples team, was forced out of the game on personal fouls.

Brainerd was unable to find the basket in the first quarter, while Staples counted up two points. The locals came back in the second quarter to tie the score at six points each. One free throw apiece was the total count in the third quarter.

Tonight's game promises to be the battle of the season when Brainerd and Crosby-Ironton meet to settle the championship. The teams will enter the finals with two stiff games behind them.

C.-I. Downs Wadena, 22-15

After putting up a strong battle for three quarters, Wadena weakened in the last quarter and Crosby-Ironton hung up a score of 22 to 15 to give them the right to meet Brainerd in the finals tonight.

Wadena fought through the first three quarters with the breaks going their way. The score stood even up at the quarter and Wadena led by one basket at the half, and further lead by one point at the third quarter. The strain of the battle was too great for them and several systematic plays on the part of the range team brought C.-I. victory.

Young, Wadena captain and guard, was the outstanding player on the floor.

MAJOR LEAGUE TRAINING GETS UNDER WAY

PRACTICE GAMES SCHEDULED FOR FIRST TIME BY 6 CLUBS

FIRST CASUALTIES ARE REPORTED FROM FLORIDA CAMP

By FRANK GETTY
(United Press Staff Correspondent)

New York, March 3.—The 1928 major league training season got its real start today, with practice games scheduled for the first time by half a dozen clubs.

From Florida came reports of the season's first casualties, split fingers sustained by Jimmy Wilson of the Phillies and Johnny Grabowski of the Yanks, and a badly strained arm incurred by "Wattie" Holm, crack utility man of the St. Louis Cardinals.

Ken Williams, purchased from the St. Louis Browns during the winter, was assigned a left field berth on the Red Sox regulars today for a practice game with the Yannigans.

The season's hold-out crop was diminished somewhat, with word that Joey Sewell, crack shortstop, was on his way to the camp of the Cleveland Indians at New Orleans, having signed a two year contract. Joe Judge, veteran Washington first baseman, signed up with the stipulation that he be allowed to share his regular post with Sisler, who was bought from the Browns last December.

"Dazzy" Vance, reports to the contrary, remains a holdup. Word was received here today from Wilbert Robinson, manager of the Brooklyn Robins, that the pitcher's salary demands had been put up to Frank York, a member of the club's board of directors now in New York City. Robbie expects Vance in line shortly, but will have to get along without the services of Roland Locke, champion sprinter, to whom he had offered a tryout with the Robins. Locke put his chances of making the American Olympic team ahead of any ambitions he may entertain to become a big league ball player.

The St. Louis Browns, with a score of new faces due to Dan Howeley's sweeping sales and winter trades, still lack one most important member—Heinie Manush, formerly of Detroit. The crack hitter, obtained with Lou Blue in one of the most important swaps of the winter stove league season, still is missing from West Palm Beach.

Joe McCarthy of the Cubs, Bert Shotton of the Phillies, Dan Howley of the Browns and Bill Carrigan of the Red Sox today ordered the first of the intra-club games of 1928. These are expected to furnish the first real line upon the ability of regulars and rookies.

Tribute to Teachers

Wells says: "No conqueror can make the multitude different from what it is; no statesman can carry the world's affairs beyond the ideas and capabilities of the generation of adults with which he deals; but teachers—I use the word in the widest sense—can do more than either conqueror or statesman—they can create a new vision and liberate the latent powers of our kind."

SPORTSMATTER

BY FRANK GETTY
UNITED PRESS SPORTS EDITOR

More than 600 college athletes will compete in the annual I. A. A. A. A. track and field championships tonight.

When the last tape has been broken, the indoor season may be considered officially at an end.

Uncle Sam can take stock of his nephews' performances and possibilities and make up a tentative list of those who deserve a free ride to Amsterdam next July.

Tonight's performers will be striving for more than recognition, however, and this is what makes an intercollegiate meet more attractive, in one way, than those in which the older, if better, athletes appear.

The rivalry tonight will be among more than a score of colleges competing for the championship of the I. A. A. A. A. Individual performance will be subordinated to team totals.

Harvard is defending the championship won last year, and the Crimson is no favorite to repeat.

When the Olympic sectional trials are held, and then the finals at Cambridge, many college athletes will be among the chosen.

Augustus T. Kirby, who is now abroad representing the American Olympic Committee, is chairman of a drive to raise funds among colleges for support of the United States team. Before leaving for St. Moritz, Kirby pointed out that 85 per cent of the 1924 Olympic team was comprised of college athletes. For this reason, he suggested, colleges should give generously to the fund of $400,000 being raised to defray expenses of the 1928 squad.

The raising of the necessary $400,000 is, of course, a foregone conclusion. The British, however, have been having their troubles, although it now seems fairly certain that sufficient funds will be forthcoming so that Great Britain may be represented.

A short time ago, Lord Rochdale, chairman of the British Olympic Council, sounded a discouraging note. Unless a further £8,000 were forthcoming, said he, it would be necessary to inform the Dutch Olympic Committee that Great Britain could not compete in the games at Amsterdam.

Meanwhile, a large number of athletes have been warned to hold themselves in readiness—and in condition—for selection on the British Olympic team. The names of those under consideration are being kept a secret, but their performances in the meantime are being watched closely by the selections committee.

The warning was issued to give the available athletes every opportunity to prepare. However, the actual trials will be the A. A. A. championships, July 6-7. These are open to athletes of all countries. Last year, foreigners walked away with 11 of the 20 championships.

RICKARD HOPEFUL THAT DEMPSEY WILL RETURN

EXPECTS TO NEGOTIATE WITH TUNNEY FOR THIRD BOUT

CAN HAVE FIGHT IF PRESENT CONTENDERS DON'T MAKE BETTER SHOWING

New York, March 3.—(UP) — "I didn't say I knew that Jack Dempsey would return for another try for the heavyweight championship," Tex Rickard explained today. "I said we needed him."

The promoter is hopeful that the ex-champion, upon his arrival here March 19, will be persuaded to start training and to let Rickard negotiate with Gene Tunney for a third bout.

"I don't care if Dempsey can't be ready by June," said Tex. "In fact, I would be surprised if he could. But he can have a fight in September unless some one of the contenders makes a whole lot better showing than any thus far."

Los Angeles, March 3. — Jack Dempsey, who recently announced his virtual retirement from professional boxing, may yet take his gloves from the peg on the wall and again meet Gene Tunney.

Referring to Tex Rickard's statement in New York that he planned to discuss with Dempsey plans for a third Dempsey-Tunney bout, Dempsey said:

"Rickard appears to be talking a little too fast and too sure.

Mrs. Dempsey and I are going east in a couple of weeks and I'll see Rickard then. If I go against Tunney again it will have to be in the fall."

The former heavyweight champion denied that he planned to go into training on March 14 at Orangeburg, N. Y., as reported yesterday in New York.

BRAINERD WINS GAME IN LAST 90 SECONDS

WISE, HAUTALA SINK BASKETS TO OVERCOME LEAD

CROSBY-IRONTON DEFEATS WADENA, 22-15, TO ENTER FINALS TONIGHT

Brainerd pulled a nerve wracking game out of the fire in the last 90 seconds of play last night, winning from Staples by one point in the closest and most exciting game of the district tournament so far.

When the gun boomed to close the game, the score book showed: Brainerd, 11; Staples, 10. In those last dark two minutes of play it looked as if Brainerd's hopes to enter the finals had been shattered. It was a tense moment. Brainerd fans were hysterical. Ninety seconds to play and Staples was leading by three points. The seconds started to fly and so did the Brainerd players. With incredible speed, fighting with every ounce of their strength, Brainerd worked its way through to the Staples territory.

Guin's shot rolled around the hoop and came out. Hautala came in, recovered the ball and dropped it through the meshes. Ten seconds later Wise got the ball, dribbled through and caromed the horsehide off the backboard in a beautiful score. It won the game for the locals. The locals then reverted to their stalling play for the remainder of the thirty seconds, but with only ten seconds to play, Wise in his over anxiousness to keep the opponents from securing a basket, fouled a Staples player. Five seconds after the Staples player had missed the foul shot the game came to a close.

The locals failed to find themselves last night. They missed basket after basket and sunk only three foul shots, while Staples sunk six free throws and two field goals. Wise found the cage for two field goals and two free throws. Guin took one field goal, Gabiou one free throw and Hautala one field basket.

Boardway, captain of the Staples team, was forced out of the game on personal fouls.

Brainerd was unable to find the basket in the first quarter, while Staples counted up two points. The locals came back in the second quarter to tie the score at six points each. One free throw apiece was the total count in the third quarter.

Tonight's game promises to be the battle of the season when Brainerd and Crosby-Ironton meet to settle the championship. The teams will enter the finals with two stiff games behind them.

C.-I. Downs Wadena, 22-15

After putting up a strong battle for three quarters, Wadena weakened in the last quarter and Crosby-Ironton hung up a score of 22 to 15 to give them the right to meet Brainerd in the finals tonight.

Wadena fought through the first three quarters with the breaks going their way. The score stood even up at the quarter and Wadena led by one basket at the half, and further lead by one point at the third quarter. The strain of the battle was too great for them and several systematic plays on the part of the range team brought C.-I. victory.

Young, Wadena captain and guard, was the outstanding player on the floor.

MAJOR LEAGUE TRAINING GETS UNDER WAY

PRACTICE GAMES SCHEDULED FOR FIRST TIME BY 6 CLUBS

FIRST CASUALTIES ARE REPORTED FROM FLORIDA CAMP

By FRANK GETTY
(United Press Staff Correspondent)

New York, March 3.—The 1928 major league training season got its real start today, with practice games scheduled for the first time by half a dozen clubs.

From Florida came reports of the season's first casualties, split fingers sustained by Jimmy Wilson of the Phillies and Johnny Grabowski of the Yanks, and a badly strained arm incurred by "Wattie" Holm, crack utility man of the St. Louis Cardinals.

Ken Williams, purchased from the St. Louis Browns during the winter, was assigned a left field berth on the Red Sox regulars today for a practice game with the Yannigans.

The season's hold-out crop was diminished somewhat, with word that Joey Sewell, crack shortstop, was on his way to the camp of the Cleveland Indians at New Orleans, having signed a two year contract. Joe Judge, veteran Washington first baseman, signed up with the stipulation that he be allowed to share his regular post with Sisler, who was bought from the Browns last December.

"Dazzy" Vance, reports to the contrary, remains a holdup. Word was received here today from Wilbert Robinson, manager of the Brooklyn Robins, that the pitcher's salary demands had been put up to Frank York, a member of the club's board of directors now in New York City. Robbie expects Vance in line shortly, but will have to get along without the services of Roland Locke, champion sprinter, to whom he had offered a tryout with the Robins. Locke put his chances of making the American Olympic team ahead of any ambitions he may entertain to become a big league ball player.

The St. Louis Browns, with a score of new faces due to Dan Howeley's sweeping sales and winter trades, still lack one most important member—Heinie Manush, formerly of Detroit. The crack hitter, obtained with Lou Blue in one of the most important swaps of the winter stove league season, still is missing from West Palm Beach.

Joe McCarthy of the Cubs, Bert Shotton of the Phillies, Dan Howley of the Browns and Bill Carrigan of the Red Sox today ordered the first of the intra-club games of 1928. These are expected to furnish the first real line upon the ability of regulars and rookies.

Tribute to Teachers

H. G. Wells says: "No conqueror can make the multitude different from what it is; no statesman can carry the world's affairs beyond the ideas and capabilities of the generation of adults with which he deals; but teachers—I use the word in the widest sense—can do more than either conqueror or statesman—they can create a new vision and liberate the latent powers of our kind."

SPORTSMATTER

BY FRANK GETTY
UNITED PRESS SPORTS EDITOR

More than 600 college athletes will compete in the annual I. A. A. A. A. track and field championships tonight.

When the last tape has been broken, the indoor season may be considered officially at an end.

Uncle Sam can take stock of his nephews' performances and possibilities and make up a tentative list of those who deserve a free ride to Amsterdam next July.

Tonight's performers will be striving for more than recognition, however, and this is what makes an intercollegiate meet more attractive, in one way, than those in which the older, if better, athletes appear.

The rivalry tonight will be among more than a score of colleges competing for the championship of the I. A. A. A. A. Individual performance will be subordinated to team totals.

Harvard is defending the championship won last year, and the Crimson is no favorite to repeat.

When the Olympic sectional trials are held, and then the finals at Cambridge, many college athletes will be among the chosen.

Augustus T. Kirby, who is now abroad representing the American Olympic Committee, is chairman of a drive to raise funds among colleges for support of the United States team. Before leaving for St. Moritz, Kirby pointed out that 85 per cent of the 1924 Olympic team was comprised of college athletes. For this reason, he suggested, colleges should give generously to the fund of $400,000 being raised to defray expenses of the 1928 squad.

The raising of the necessary $400,000 is, of course, a foregone conclusion.

The British, however, have been having their troubles, although it now seems fairly certain that sufficient funds will be forthcoming so that Great Britain may be represented.

A short time ago, Lord Rochdale, chairman of the British Olympic Council, sounded a discouraging note. Unless a further £8,000 were forthcoming, said he, it would be necessary to inform the Dutch Olympic Committee that Great Britain could not compete in the games at Amsterdam.

Meanwhile, a large number of athletes have been warned to hold themselves in readiness—and in condition—for selection on the British Olympic team. The names of those under consideration are being kept a secret, but their performances in the meantime are being watched closely by the selections committee.

The warning was issued to give the available athletes every opportunity to prepare. However, the actual trials will be the A. A. A. championships, July 6-7. These are open to athletes of all countries. Last year, foreigners walked away with 11 of the 20 championships.

RICKARD HOPEFUL THAT DEMPSEY WILL RETURN

EXPECTS TO NEGOTIATE WITH TUNNEY FOR THIRD BOUT

CAN HAVE FIGHT IF PRESENT CONTENDERS DON'T MAKE BETTER SHOWING

New York, March 3.—(UP) — "I didn't say I knew that Jack Dempsey would return for another try for the heavyweight championship," Tex Rickard explained today. "I said we needed him."

The promoter is hopeful that the ex-champion, upon his arrival here March 19, will be persuaded to start training and to let Rickard negotiate with Gene Tunney for a third bout.

"I don't care if Dempsey can't be ready by June," said Tex. "In fact, I would be surprised if he could. But he can have a fight in September unless some one of the contenders makes a whole lot better showing than any thus far."

Los Angeles, March 3. — Jack Dempsey, who recently announced his virtual retirement from professional boxing, may yet take his gloves from the peg on the wall and again meet Gene Tunney.

Referring to Tex Rickard's statement in New York that he planned to discuss with Dempsey plans for a third Dempsey-Tunney bout, Dempsey said:

"Rickard appears to be talking a little too fast and too sure.

Mrs. Dempsey and I are going east in a couple of weeks and I'll see Rickard then. If I go against Tunney again it will have to be in the fall."

The former heavyweight champion denied that he planned to go into training on March 14 at Orangeburg, N. Y., as reported yesterday in New York.
